

SAN DIEGO COVID-19

COMMUNITY RESPONSE FUND IMPACT REPORT

ACTION AT A TIME OF ADVERSITY

The past year has reminded us that although we may face significant challenges and tragic loss, there's one constant that remains – San Diegans and San Diego are better when we join together.

On March 16, 2020, The San Diego Foundation partnered with local leaders to launch the San Diego COVID-19 Community Response Fund. Since then, our staff and volunteers have collaborated with leaders across San Diego County to provide grants to local nonprofit organizations where they are needed most. To date, we have granted $58 million to over 200 nonprofit partners working on the frontline of the pandemic.

These heroic organizations have been there for our communities, providing computers, internet access, childcare, food, financial assistance, medical support, workforce training and other vital needs to San Diegans disproportionately impacted by the pandemic.

Our work during the pandemic crisis has been daunting and eye-opening. The pandemic has not affected all of us evenly. Under-resourced communities in San Diego County have been hit harder by COVID-19, and our grantmaking has prioritized those San Diegans.

As we mark one-year since the launch of the COVID-19 Community Response Fund, this report to our community outlines philanthropy's role in addressing the crisis.

We are grateful to our founding partners, as well as the thousands of other nonprofit organizations, donors and leaders who have engaged in monumental ways to help.

A NATIONAL MOVEMENT

In times of great emergency, community foundations are uniquely positioned to put their philanthropic leadership and deep, cross-sector relationships to work for all who are impacted and assess need quickly and nimbly grant out funding to critical nonprofit programs.

The size and speed of the community foundation response to COVID-19 has been unlike any response to a crisis in our nation's history. Giving to community foundations for the COVID-19 public health crisis is a national crisis, with billions in grant funding mobilized to nonprofits by more than 600 community foundations in all 50 states.

Donor-advised funds have also been a significant fund source, in addition to the COVID-19 Community Response Fund. During the first three months of the pandemic, giving from donor-advised funds at The San Diego Foundation increased by 155 percent compared to the same period in the previous year.

79% of people served live in poverty

56% of grantees reported receiving additional dollars as a result of their grant from The San Diego Foundation, allowing them to expand programs and serve more people.

“ Because of The San Diego Foundation’s reputation, we were able to garner additional support from past and current funders because your rapid response helped convey the seriousness of the challenges. We raised funds from both institutional and individual donors. ”

PROVIDING HELP & HOPE

NILE SISTERS

Recognizing that many local hospitals and care facilities were experiencing nursing shortages due to the COVID-19 pandemic, while at the same time so many San Diegans faced unemployment, Nile Sisters launched a training program designed as an accelerated nurse assistant training course for candidates seeking nurse assistant certification by the state of California. The effort focuses on providing opportunities to hard-to-reach and underrepresented populations who want to develop new skills for in-demand health care careers.

O’SIDE KITCHEN COLLABORATIVE

Vallie Gilley was looking to create a zero-waste, sustainability catering business when she opened O’side Kitchen Collaborative with a mission of raising awareness about food waste. When the pandemic hit though, O’side Kitchen Collaborative had to pivot, and fast. Fueled by grant support from the city of Oceanside, The San Diego Foundation and others, the nonprofit took rescued food and distributed more than 250,000 meals in the first four months of the pandemic alone. On top of that, the organization hired furloughed restaurant employees to assist in the work.

NORTH COUNTY LIFELINE

North County Lifeline, which has served low-income, disadvantaged populations across North San Diego County for nearly a half century, sprung into action when hundreds of its clients were all-of-a-sudden unable to buy groceries, pay rent or obtain housing. Not only did the nonprofit provide immediate assistance to support basic needs, but it pivoted seamlessly to telehealth services for hundreds of individuals. And one of the best parts was the appreciation it received from the families helped. Even though staff could not see people in person, their clients found a way to say thank you by sticking heartfelt post-it notes on their office door. One individual shared, "I don't know what we would have done without this help. We would still be in a hotel or worse, on the streets homeless."

CENTRAL SAN DIEGO BLACK CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, LOCAL INITIATIVES SUPPORT CORPORATION, AND ASIAN BUSINESS ASSOCIATION OF SAN DIEGO

As the pandemic persisted, more and more communities were hit by the economic impacts of the crisis, particularly the small business community. Recognizing that many business leaders, particularly Black, Latinx and Asian owners, were forced to close or limit operations yet again during the surge of COVID-19 cases over the winter months, The San Diego Foundation partnered with the Central San Diego Black Chamber of Commerce, Local Initiatives Support Corporation, and the Asian Business Association of San Diego to provide financial support for local Black, Latinx and Asian business owners.

BIG TABLE

Right from the start, the restaurant and hospitality industry was one of the hardest hit as lower-paid, service-industry jobs were the first to go. In many cases, these were San Diegans living paycheck to paycheck who suddenly found themselves without support, a safety net, or a place to turn for help. That's when Big Table, a nonprofit focused on assisting restaurant workers, stepped in using grant dollars of local restaurant workers to assess their needs and provide flexible relief. One of those individuals was Martin Gowolo, a 54-year-old Sudanese refugee who was supporting his wife, eight children and two grandchildren as a dishwasher at a local restaurant before he was laid off. Big Table staff listened to Martin for an hour about his situation and struggles, to determine how best to help. Like so many others like him, Martin and his family received support in the form of grocery gift cards and other critical assistance to help get through the crisis.

COMPUTERS 2 KIDS

Even before the coronavirus, one in five students in San Diego County were digitally under-connected or not connected at all. Broadband gaps are particularly pronounced in Black and Hispanic households with school-age children – especially those with low incomes. Among the many grants focused on bridging the digital divide, The Foundation provided $175,000 to Computers 2 Kids, which helped hire 14 additional technicians and internet technology professionals to refurbish 20,000 computers on an accelerated basis. Working around the clock, the technicians were able to distribute up to 300 computers daily to San Diego students in need.

“ The COVID-19 crisis has forced all of the community colleges and schools in San Diego County to convert their classes to an online format. At the same time, many students lack the resources to make the transition to online education. We are grateful to The San Diego Foundation for its contribution that will add to our countywide effort to provide laptops and Internet connectivity so that students can continue their education without falling onto the wrong side of the digital divide. ”

– DR. CONSTANCE M. CARROLL, SAN DIEGO COMMUNITY COLLEGE DISTRICT CHANCELLOR
